MANHATTAN, KAN. — Through the first half, it was just another day at the office for the top-ranked Cornhuskers. Kansas State was obliging nicely, 38-5, en route to Nebraska's ninth consecutive victory. Trouble is, the defense lingered too long over lunch.

By the time the Blackshirts got back, the offense was shivering from inactivity and the Wildcats had worked their football version of a four-corner offense through the third quarter while allowing Nebraska only four offensive plays and a punt. Into the fourth quarter, K-State scored three touchdowns in six minutes to make it 38-25.

The suicide-mission Cats tried four onside kickoffs and converted one. By the time the Huskers said "enough," K-State had closed enough that Tom Osborne called for a two-point conversion pass with 7 1/2 minutes left in the game for a little safer cushion when it was 44-25. It failed, but the offense came up with a final touchdown following a Mike McCashland interception to put it away.

Incredibly, K-State, dropping to 2-6, more than doubled Nebraska's possession time, 40:27 to 19:33. But when they did manage to get the ball, the Husker offense made tracks, particularly Mike Rozier, who hit his season high 227 yards on 23 carries and scored three touchdowns. Quarterback Turner Gill matched the touchdown pace.

The Huskers took a backward step, literally, at the outset in this one. Rozier started from the end zone with the opening kickoff, stepped onto the playing field, then back into the end zone to down the ball. That was two points on a safety for K-State.

On its next five possessions of the first half, the Huskers scored four touchdowns and a field goal, and tackle Jim Skow chipped in a touchdown with an interception.

K-State, however, fired back with an 11-play drive that consumed 5:37 and died with Scott Strasburger's fumble recovery at the NU 4 and followed up with an 18-play drive that took 8:13 and did score.

Coach Osborne's Evaluation

'If you look around the country, you might point out the fact that it's just pretty hard for a team, apparently, to play 60 minutes every game, nine games in a row, and not have some lapses.' Tom Osborne.

Football can be a curious game when a team wins by 26 points, remains unbeaten after nine games and the fans, news media and even the coaches and players dwell on "problems." It is stranger yet when the winning coach must defend himself against accusations of trying to run up the score when his quarterback, who would lead the nation in passing efficiency if he passed enough, threw six times in the last minute of the first half.

Tom Osborne addressed those points in the aftermath of the 51-25 victory at Kansas State.

"It's a little bit of a strange situation. The feeling in our lockerroom was that we lost. I think a lot of our fans felt that way. It's a silly thing when you're apologizing for winning 51-25. I guess there is a general feeling right now that we have a problem, and yet you've got to look at the fact that we've been able to win nine games and most of them haven't been particularly close.

"So I don't know. It's a week to week deal. Defense is played so much with emotion, and I thought we played pretty well the first half. Obviously, the second half we went flat. We've been down to Kansas State five times since I've been head coach, and there has been only one time when we really just breezed through the game, where we didn't have trouble for a half.

"Typically, they play pretty well at Manhattan. After looking at the film, frankly, I was a little surprised that there seemed to be better effort on defense than I thought there was. I thought during the game that they were kind of standing around, but they were scrambling around and played hard. We didn't get the job done very well, and I'm sure there wasn't a real intense emotional effort going on.

"If you look around the country, you might point out the fact that it's just pretty hard for a team, apparently, to play 60 minutes every game, nine games in a row and not have some lapses.

"Evidently there was some concern about our throwing the football (just before the half). I guess I don't understand the game very well, but when you have to start backing off and not throwing the ball the first half, that just doesn't agree with my understanding of how you play. What we want to do is get all the points we can until we're sure the game is won. And when we're sure it's won, we're going to start playing people.

"As it turned out, at one point in the second half, it didn't look like we had enough. I certainly have no apology for anything like that. I'm frankly getting a little tired of that kind of conversation.

"There's no question we were trying to score. Turner (Gill) isn't getting to throw the ball very much. I figured if things were going to go like they should, in the middle of the third quarter, he's going to be out of there. I want the guy to throw a few passes. I don't think there's anything wrong with that. We were trying to score a touchdown.

"We've never quit trying to score in the first half. We've generally never quit trying to score in the third quarter...it's a function of score and time. When you've still got a half of football left, and you're running the score up, it's ridiculous because as anybody could see, we were in a position where we could conceivably lose the game the second half.

"So you do all you can to score points until you know in your own mind...and sometimes being a coach, you're just by nature paranoid. A lot of times when everybody up in the stands knows you've got enough points, I don't know that. I'm standing on the sidelines realizing some things can happen. I'd a lot rather be accused of scoring too many points than having to some time come in and explain why we threw a game away by not scoring when we had a chance."

In reviewing the game, he said, "I thought we played very well the first half on both sides of the ball. The interception by Skow was a big play, and we had an interception by Bret Clark. Our defense was doing a good job.

"Offensively, we scored every time we had the ball except for right before the half. The second half, of course, was a different ball game. There's a little bit of a tendency to relax when you're ahead 38-5, and we did.

"Also, Kansas State did a better job of executing. They got a few things going offensively. They ran an option pretty well and got a sweep play going and were averaging six or seven yards a try on that.

"We apparently weren't playing things real aggressively. I can't really pinpoint any one thing that was wrong. K-State was playing with a lot of emotion, and (quarterback Stan) Weber made some big plays, some big third down plays, and they did a good job of calling plays and keeping us off balance.

"They kept the ball the whole third quarter except for five plays and that got things turned around. Things started rolling for them. I guess the good part was that when we finally did get our hands on the ball, we were able to knock a couple in at the end, and our defense did stiffen toward the end of the fourth quarter, and we won going away."

This week's opponent, Iowa State, "has a good short passing game, and they'll be the same kind of team. The next two weeks (also Kansas), our pass defense is going to get a tremendous test."

Injury Report

Nebraska's linebackers, particularly, took a pounding against Kansas State. Mike Knox and Mark Daun "are both pretty beat up, and both have bruised left knees," Trainer Jerry Weber said. "And Chad Daffer sprained his ankle. He may miss some practice time."

But there were no serious injuries, and no players are expected to sit out the Iowa State game because of K-State hurts. Offensive tackle John Sherlock is expected back for the Cyclones after missing four games with a knee injury.

The Sunday treatment log after the K-State game included: Irving Fryar (shoulder), Scott Strasburger (shoulder), Neil Harris (lower back bruise), Tom Rathman (tight hamstring), Mike Rozier (twisted ankle).

SECOND HALF

This field position chart shows how each offense moved the ball on each possession. The numbers and information down the side columns indicate how each possession ended (punt, fumble, interception, kickoff, etc.). If a team loses the ball after a kick (a return for a touchdown or a fumble), no possession will be indicated for the other team.

Lockerroom Chatter

Neil Harris, cornerback — He had seen K-State quarterback Stan Weber, who was making his first start, before. Weber rushed for 113 yards, scored a touchdown and passed for another. "I played against him in a high school all-star game (in Kansas). He's got a whole lot of talent. I knew he was a good passer. He was the difference maker for them.

"There aren't too many people in here (lockerroom) right now. You can't say we did our job. We were on the field too long. The only time I've spent more time on the field is in practice. We were getting tired of the way things were going, but we weren't exhausted.

"I've definitely never played in a game that changed so much. They (Wildcats) were really aggressive. They deserve a lot of credit. They didn't lay down."

Frank Solich, backfield coach — He was proud that Mike Rozier had his season high of 227 yards on 23 carries and moved ahead of Oklahomans Joe Washington and Steve Owens into the No. 2 spot, behind Oklahoma State's Terry Miller, on the all-time Big Eight rushing list. He also wasn't bothered much by Rozier's safety on the opening kickoff. "It was frustrating for everybody. The offense wanted in the game, but things weren't developing for the defense. Mike is great in those kinds of situations. He came through when called upon. It was typical Mike Rozier.

"On the safety, he got confused. He'd taken one step too many, and somebody told him to stay in the end zone. Mike's done so many great things for our program, that was certainly nothing to get on him about."

Nate Mason, quarterback — Turner Gill's backup made an appearance in the second quarter when it appeared Nebraska had things well in hand. But he remained on the bench the second half when the Wildcats challenged. "They used a little ball control on us. I feel bad that I didn't get to play the second half, but Craig (Sundberg) didn't get to play at all."

Turner Gill, quarterback — "I just shows you can't relax at any time. Everybody's getting down on our defense, but that's the way it is sometimes. Our defense won the Oklahoma State game. We learned from that. Everything is together. Everything is done as a team."

Harry Grimminger, offensive guard — "We were getting tight on the sideline. I don't mind being there if the defense is doing well. You feel bad when you're not in there, but there were times when the defense AND the offense lapsed. Complacency might have been a part of it. We didn't think they'd be very good. They hadn't demonstrated the first half that they were real good. But we got stung when we had a chance."

Mike Keeler, defensive tackle — "It would have been more frustrating if we were laying down and crying. We played hard. I don't know what we were doing wrong, but whatever it was, we'll get it worked out this week. We'll take it on ourselves to improve; we don't need any reorganization. We won't have a repeat performance like this."

Mike Rozier, I-back — Referring to his safety on the opening kickoff; "I changed my mind. I wasn't sure about the rule. But I've got it straight now. I was upset with myself. That was stupid."

Jim Skow, defensive back — Backup followed regular Rob Stuckey's lead of the week before with an interception. Stuckey fell down, but Skow made it 39 yards for a touchdown. "When I was a sophomore in high school (Omaha Roncalli), I was a wide receiver. That's the last time I scored a touchdown. I was supposed to cover that guy — the fullback in a one-back set-on the screen. The tackles practice catching the ball on screens, minimally. Stuckey was kidding me afterward. He said, 'You're the glory boy now.' "

The Way We See It

The Huskers Say...

Huskers Illustrated

"Nebraska was frustrated and disappointed with a mere 26-point victory at Kansas State. That is evidence of the high expectations in Huskerdom.

Imagine how Iowa State feels after a 23-point loss at home to Missouri, a former Husker victim in Columbia. The Cyclone flanks have been devastated by the option running of Oklahoma's Danny Bradley and Missouri's Marlon Adler. Wait 'till they see Turner Gill.

When Donnie Duncan departed as head coach in Ames after a 4-6-1 season, Jim Criner came in from Boise State with some changes that have been cosmetic so far. Take the Raging Cyclone helmet design, for instance. Hasn't helped stir more than a mild breeze yet.

The big win in a 3-5 season has been over Kansas: the low point, a loss at home to New Mexico State.

Cyclone David Archer will throw a ton, and flanker Tracy Henderson will be a pest in the Husker secondary, but ISU hasn't run much, and the Blackshirts, purely miffed about their Kansas State second half showing, can feast on a one-dimension offense. Nebraska's home fans will be in a howling good mood after Nebraska 62, Iowa State 14."

Ron Richmond

Kearney Daily Hub

"Any team that's got to play Oklahoma, Missouri and Nebraska in a row is in for a load of a time, especially when Nebraska is the last of the three.

"Whether Iowa State shows up with a team that beat Kansas and Colorado or was blasted by Iowa and Oklahoma doesn't really matter.

"The Huskers should have their way by about a 61-7 margin."

Larry Havranek

Hastings Tribune

"The only problem the Huskers should encounter en route to win number 10 will be in keeping the score down to a rout.

"The porous Iowa State defense will have its hands full of the Huskers' Heisman backfield; that is, if they can catch up to them.

"But, unless the Huskers' secondary can fill some holes, Iowa State quarterback Dave Archer will be the only thing that keeps the game from being a shutout.

"The only thing I can see coming out of this game are more figures for the Nebraska record book. Nebraska 63, Iowa State 14."

Dave Dawson

Columbus Daily Telegram

"Nebraska has displayed an awesome offensive arsenal this year, while Iowa State's defense has been hard-pressed to slow people down, let alone stop them.

"Though Iowa State does have an excellent passer in David Archer, it will be a tough day for the Cyclones.

I covered Iowa State during the Earle Bruce era for the Iowa State Daily when I was in college and was able to see ISU defeat Nebraska in successive years. While I feel Jim Criner will be the coach to lead the Cyclones to respectability, the rebuilding won't be helped in Lincoln this year.

"Mike Rozier will have a field day against the Iowa State defense to solidify his Heisman claims. Iowa State will be lucky to hold the Huskers under 50, and they won't be lucky, as I see Nebraska winning 56-16."

Gene McGivern

Ames, Ia. Daily Tribune

"I know in the series that Iowa State had two victories in a row in 1976-77, but in the last few years Nebraska has really taken it to them. The last time they played in Lincoln it was a close game for three quarters, and Nebraska scored 24 points in about a 2 1/2 minute period on the clock.

"Obviously Lincoln is a very tough place to win because the crowd is such a factor in the game. It seems like Nebraska, year in and year out, is the kind of team you can't run against. The two years in a row they beat Nebraska, the Cyclones did it by the pass. It seems that the teams that have given Nebraska trouble in the past are those that can pass.

"Of course, Iowa State relies heavily on the pass this year. David Archer is a senior and he's on par to rewrite all of Iowa State's season and career passing records.

"Iowa State's season thus far has been full of peaks and valleys. They probably hit rock bottom with a loss to New Mexico State, but the team saw some of its internal problems like inexperience and injuries start to take care of themselves, and they beat a good Kansas team. Nebraska 45, Iowa State 17."

Chuck Shoffner

Associates Press, Des Moines

"Nebraska has got to be a heavy favorite based on everything they've done this year. They have the best offense in the country, and I think there's too much talent for Iowa State to overcome.

"I think Iowa State will be a pretty good challenge for the Nebraska defense because David Archer is a pretty good quarterback and coach Jim Criner has put together what appears to be a pretty well-conceived passing game.

"Iowa State has excellent wide receivers, their backs catch the ball well and Archer, if he has time to throw, will be on target.

"What Iowa State has lacked is a real solid running game to complement Archer, and I think that will cause them some problems against Nebraska.

"Defensively, while Iowa State plays hard and with a lot of emotion, they would have to play way over their heads to stop the Nebraska offense.

"So what it boils down to, I think, is that Iowa State will be able to move the ball up and down the field a little bit and they might be able to put a couple of touchdowns on the board. But on the other hand, I don't think they'll stop Nebraska. I think you'll see a solid Cor-nhusker victory.

"As far as the score, I think 49-14 would be in the ballpark."

Chuck Morris

KMA Radio, Shenandoah, Ia.

"To me, the only real suspense this year will be how long it will take for Nebraska to put the game away. I think Iowa State enjoys the challenge of Nebraska. I think any team enjoys the challenge of playing the best in America.

"But once the emotional level fades and you get in to the reality of blocking, tackling and running, the two teams just don't match up.

"Most people I've talked with expect it will be a lopsided score, but I don't think so. Because of geography and other reasons, Iowa State plays Nebraska well. Even though they don't match up, I think Jim Criner has done some good things at Iowa State.

"I firmly believe, without a doubt, that the Huskers are the best team in America. It's an enviable situation they have. They have a great coach who also happens to be a super human being.

"I think people can expect Iowa State to become more competitive in future years against everybody. Even if Iowa State doesn't win another league ball game, I think the people who watched them in their non-conference games have to feel good about the two wins.

"I really think that the Huskers won't roll up that huge a score."
